Developer given continuance in hopes of easing residents' many concerns over project

by Lisa Parsons

The developer hoping to build a subdivision consisting of 14 single family residential lots at the northwest end of Dain Court was granted a continuance by the City Council Monday night.

The project was considered by the Planning Commission on February 26, 1990, at which time residents of the neighborhood voiced their opposition to the development. They were concerned about the density of the project, the substandard width of the proposed private road, the safety of children using the pedestrian walkway that extends from Dain Court to Golden Avenue, the steepness of the road, the amount of parking on the private street and the potential noise and drainage problems. The Planning Commission denied the project based on some of these safety concerns and the developer, Dworkin & Ogden, appealed to the City Council.

Laurie Price, of Zucker Systems, a planning service, asked for the continuance saying there had not been enough time to meet with the City Engineer or their engineer to work out alternatives. "The continuance would give us a chance to see if the project could or should be redesigned to accommodate the residents concerns," Price said.

Mayor Jim Dorman recommended a continuation of the public hearing because he said he hopes the developer can modify the plans and ease some of the resident's objections. "The developer wants to work out something that might be acceptable and this has been successful in the past in Lemon Grove." His other reason for recommending a continuance was the absence of Councilmembers Brian Cochran and Robert Burns.

Councilmember Lois Heiserman agreed with Dorman saying, "The most important reason for granting the continuance is that there are not five members on the Council tonight. I hope all of you here tonight will have enough enthusiasm to come back."

Dorman warned that if substantial changes are made in the development's design, it will go back before the Planning Commission.

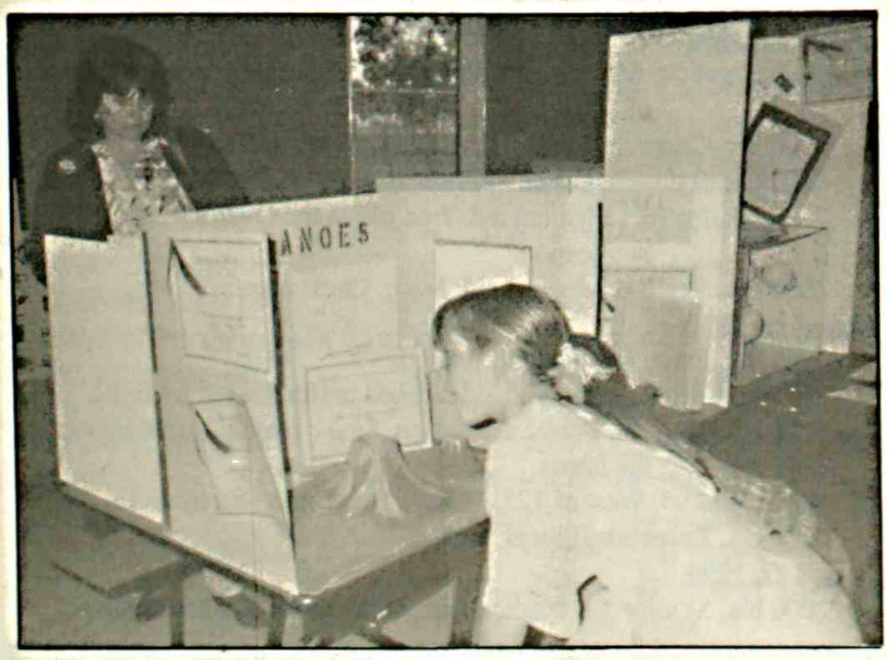
Price said they plan to redesign access roads and perhaps change the size of the lots, but warned that the cost per unit will go up. "We cannot do everything the community wants, but we will do as much as possible."

The Public Hearing will be continued May 21st.

Members of the Lemon Grove City Council, Lois Heiserman, Brian Cochran, Karen O'Rourke and Robert Burns, planted drought-tolerant Melaleuca (cageput) trees at an open house for the new Public Works building. Leslie Ruh, Public Works director and City Engineer, gave a tour of the new building pointing out its large storage capacity and the special effort made to keep noise disturbances down.

Local artists to show work

The Lemon Grove Art Association will have a sidewalk "Show and Sell" in front of the new Alpha Beta store at the Lemon Grove Plaza in Lemon Grove, 7090 Broadway. Show time is 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., Saturday, May 5th. Artists using oil, acrylic, watercolor and pastels will have pictures for your viewing. A large easel will display works of the members that will be raffled off hourly at the booth on Saturday, May 12th, at the Old Time Days Faire.



Young scientists at Golden Avenue Elementary School displayed their findings at a combination Open House/Science Fair Tuesday, April 24th. Class and individual projects ranged in subject from how a carnation absorbs color and the life of a silk worm to which detergent actually cleans the best and which fingerprint pattern is the most common.

Helix declares Stage II Water Alert

Storage levels throughout the state are at tragically low levels and in San Diego County, where there is "moderate" storage, water planners wrestle with the dilemma of either using water from storage to fulfill this year's full requirements or banking a portion of the water in case of a fifth dry year. The San Diego County Water Authority has advised Helix and the other 23 member agencies that is is highly probable that they cannot meet water demands without reducing storage to critically low levels. Water managers throughout the county have decided to bank some of the water in storage reservoirs and call upon the residents of their respective districts to cut back on their water use by 10%. That puts us in a Stage II Water Alert.

Metropolitan Water District's Colorado River entitlement that you've been hearing would eventually be reduced from 1.2 million acre feet a year (1.2 million acre feet serves 2.4 million families for a year) to 550,000 has been reduced this year to 950,000--20%.

For years the City of Los Angeles has relied heavily on a supply of water from Owens Valley. That supply has felt the effects of both the drought and environmental restraints, causing Los Angeles to turn to its water entitlement from Metropolitan Water District to make up the deficit.

Highlights of Stage II include the following:

Lawn/landscape watering 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. (overnight).

Vehicle washing...same time. (Positive shut-off nozzles only)

Filling of pools and spas...same time.

No washing sidewalks, driveways or other paved areas anytime.

Water in restaurants served on request only.

The State Water Project in Northern California has received only 50% of the usual replenishment to the supply and environmental concerns for the San Francisco Bay have combined to make the amount of water available to MWD and Southern California unsure.

State water managers have put agriculture on notice that they will receive only 50% of their last year's use, and urban deliveries may also face cutbacks.

Board President Harold Ball is confident Helix customers will once again make the effort to use water prudently and encourages customers in La Mesa, Lemon Grove, El Cajon, and Spring Valley to pick up a copy of Helix's Water Conservation Ordinance at city halls, chambers of commerce, libraries or Helix's main office, 8111 University Avenue, La Mesa, or call 466-0585, Ext. 25.

Ball promises to do everything possible to avoid further restrictions and states that Helix's rate structure is designed to minimize the impact of the 10% reduction in water use. Increases this year are to cover normal increases in the cost of operation and funding for major capital projects.

Helix offers a conservation hotline (466-1869) to allow customers to check on the water stage under which we are operating and to receive water conservation tips.

Earth Day celebrated with art

by Lisa Parsons

Recycling has become a hot issue in the 90s and students at San Altos School have discovered a way to recycle that's creative and fun.

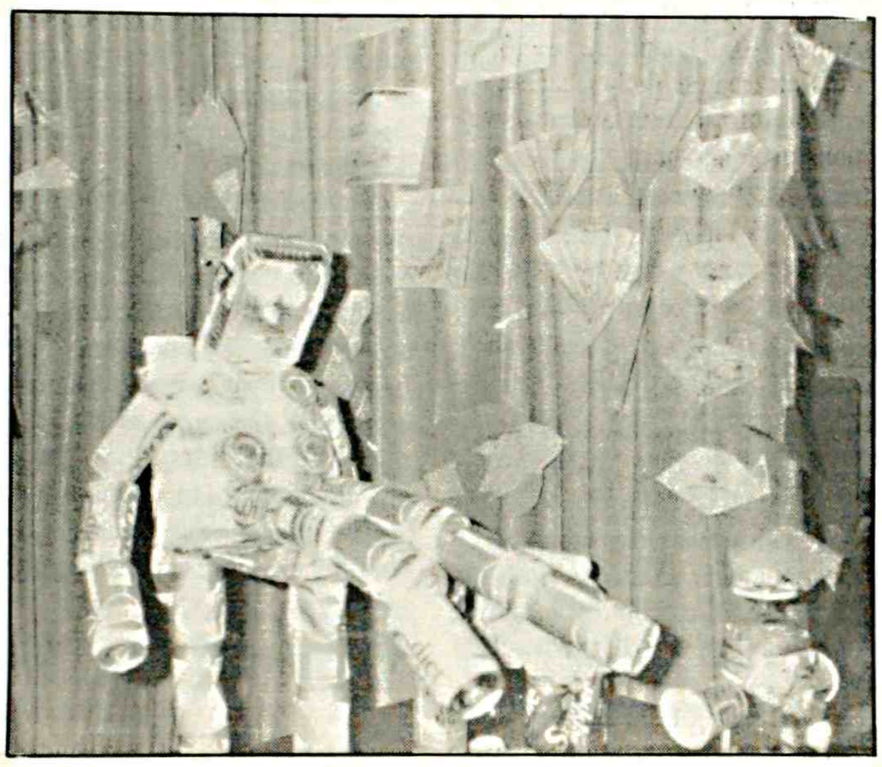
As part of Earth Day awareness week, Los Altos students studied the importance of recycling and were assigned an unusual art project, "We asked our students to come up with some sort of sculpture that utilized material that can be recycled," said Bill Makinson, student council advisor.

What the kids came up with was 83 pieces of recyclable art ranging from a robot built out of aluminum cans to a space ship made of paper plates and toothpicks. Student council officers created a display of the sculptures and a private showing was held in the San Altos cafeteria. Each participant received ice cream and a certificate of participation.

Makinson said he hopes the recyclable art show will become an annual event, "Preserving the earth is as important to us as the war on drugs," he said, " and we're going to commit ourselves to it." As part of that commitment, San Altos students picked up trash on campus, piled it around the school's flagpole and discussed the large amount of recyclable goods they found that would normally just be thrown away. Students participated in a new tree planting program as well.

When Student Council President Amber Cusick was asked what would become of the art projects after the show was over, she shrugged her shoulders as if to say the answer was obvious and replied, "Recycle 'em."

Student Council Treasurer Paul Viehmann, President Amber Cusick and Vice-President Elijah Nillaga organized the art show and displayed the recycled art sculptures.



Creative San Altos students built a robot and chair out of recyclable aluminum cans.

Arnaiz named Coach of the Year

By Jennifer Ek

Helix football head coach, Jim Arnaiz was honored by the California Coaches Association last month when he was named Coach of The Year in the state of California.

Arnaiz has led his team to three section titles in 17 seasons. His most recent success was in leading his team to a strong 7-2-1 record before they were eliminated by San Pasqual in the CIF playoffs.

"It wasn't just this one season," said Arnaiz. "It counts for many years of coaching."

Being chosen as football coach of the year is not only an honor for Arnaiz but also for our community. Arnaiz is only the second coach in San Diego to receive this award.

Arnaiz was quick to point out that he didn't do it alone. "You don't get it single handedly," said Arnaiz. "Assistant coaches, athletes, parents and the school in general are a big help."

Coach Arnaiz flew with his wife to Walnut Creek for the awards banquet.

"The banquet was nice," said Arnaiz. "Being selected for this is quite an honor."

Coach Donny Van Hook added, "He deserves this award." "He's really helped a lot of young men and coaches."

As the winner from California, Arnaiz is a candidate for the Regional Competition, where he will compete against coaches from Hawaii, New Mexico, Arizona, and other states.

Earth Day plus ten - and counting

Well, Earth Day is over. We've had our rallies in the park, our "Save the Earth" T-shirts and our star-studded TV special. A few rock concerts have proclaimed the saving of earth in decibels that must certainly have raised the level of noise pollution to dangerous levels. And now what? Apparently nothing.

TV is back to its usual inanity, and a perusal of the papers for the last several days comes up blank. Our busy lives have led us on to other things.

But the ailing earth is still there. Acid rain continues to decimate large sections of the northeast. The ozone level continues to deplete, while world leaders argue as to whether or not the problem really exists. Toxic waste continues to accumulate with no global or even national plan as to safely disposing of it. The eco-structure of the ocean is being seriously compromised, while President Bush stands on the brink of the inevitable decision to allow drilling off the Southern California coast.

The list of problems is almost endless while significant national or international action is minimal. It is symbolically pleasing to plant trees and pick up litter once a year, but it is also dangerous in that we use that quick and easy tokenism to convince ourselves that we are "doing something about it."

What will be required of the western industrial world is not less than a profound change in the way we live. New and frankly expensive methods of disposal must be found. Vast industrial changes must be made to clean up the air. Alternate fuels and travel systems must be developed. In short, sacrifices on a large scale are in order.

Are we willing to make such sacrifices? On the surface it seems doubtful. Change can mean upheaval, job loss, discomfort and loss of "the good things." Governments must take action and governments are slow and unwieldly things. Industry must take action but industry means jobs and stockholders and competition. We must demand action, but action of this kind means sacrifice. So instead we are gamblers. "Maybe it won't be too bad during my lifetime."

Unfortunately the clock of earth's liveability is ticking, and for those who can hear it, a kind of despair is setting in. As the nuclear threat retreats we are, indeed, coming face-to-face with the real enemy--ourselves.

Padres cut to 25

It isn't easy being a major league general manager, which is really what Jack McKeon's front office job happens to be.

He's also a vice president and has a title impressive enough to make a British Lord turn Irish-green with envy.

Officially Jack is "Vice President in charge of Baseball Operations" in the front office and "Manager" on the field of playing dreams.

In all of organized baseball, only McKeon's assistant Bill Beck has a longer title. His starts out, "Assistant to the Vice President in charge..."

Despite all the lofty titles and grand prestige, McKeon faces a difficult task in doubling as the players' boss and the players boss's boss.

On the one hand, McKeon tries to bring out the best in each of his charges with a unique "you and me" approach to playing a game where success is based on individual skills.

McKeon also proposes that each of these skillful and talented athletes play the game in a "what's best for the team" approach that may not result in recognition for their efforts.

And, at the same time, McKeon must set aside whatever personal feelings he may have and trim the roster to the most potentially productive 25 players available.

In short, he must physically and mentally build up those in his talent pool, then develop them to their fullest capability, and then possibly cut down a talented youngster in such a way as to make him work even harder to make the grade next time out.

Soloman should have had such an easy task. A manager, who is also a general manager, and a vice president, has to be at least as wise as Solomon 25 to 30 times a season, 40 times in the off-season and even then, he has to get lucky at free agent time.

McKeon had a problem of sorts as the season approached the May 1st deadline cutdown. He chose to let the players in question settle it for themselves.

The Padres had taken a pair of games from the Chicago Cubs and McKeon rested Jack Clark, Benito Santiago, Gary Templeton and Bip Roberts in the final contest of the 3-game set.

The Cubs couldn't understand McKeon's move. "If we can't beat them today, we're really in trouble," said one Cubby. The four guys who started knew what was going on. They were getting a chance to play. And several were getting a chance to stay. Two had to go. Both played themselves off the team.

First baseman Rob Nelson went 0-5, striking out 4 times in his several varsity auditions. Pitcher Rafael Valdez worked 5.2 varsity innings and logged an 11.12 earned run average.

Dedicated effort will bring them back. Bip Roberts went down in disappointment. So did Joey Cora. Both fought their way back.

Clark and Tempy are veterans who understand the value of a day's rest now and again. Both are sound and both figure to stay that way all the way into September.

Injuries possibly caused by age and overwork have such veterans as Kevin Mitchell (SF), Kirk Gibson and Orel Hershiser (LA) and a host of others on the barnacle list.

McKeon's occasional day off policy pays off in sound players and strong finishes. Even Solomon couldn't do better.

Letters

Dear Editor:

I recently read the article in the Lemon Grove Review by Frank Andrews (titled "What Nerve?") and was disturbed by what I read.

First of all, the explanation of Carpal Tunnel Syndrome was very simplistic, as an enlarged wrist muscle is only one of many causes. True Carpal Tunnel Syndrome is an entrapment of the median nerve which causes its impingement and is known to have as many as a dozen different possible causes. It is felt in the health care field that 80% of all carpal tunnel, if caught before it becomes chronic, is correctable by conservative means (non-surgical). This is why it is imperative that a thorough examination is done to rule out any causes that may not be in the wrist (impingement in the neck can cause wrist pain and numbness).

Secondly, you make it seem so simple. If one has the symptoms, just go get surgery done and you will feel fine. Unfortunately, any surgery is not healthy to the body and, if the cause is something else, then the person is going to suffer even more than before.

Lastly, I know from experience how people in a lot of pain react. They often just want the pain to go away and are easily swayed into doing some fairly drastic things. I feel your article tends to lead these people without cautioning them about the potential dangers. Please, next time inform the people that this is only the author's experience with this problem and that they should exhaust all conservative means before having surgery done.

Sincerely,
Dr. Boyd Stewart, D.C.
Lemon Grove

Editor's Note: Mr. Andrews writes a weekly column for the newspaper which reflects his personal experiences, and is not intended as medical advice. Dr. Stewart is a local chiropractor.

From Where I Sit

Ye Olde Sap Suckers

The last snow has melted, the ice on the lakes is breaking up, the first robin appears and the maple tree starts spewing its sweet sap. These signs of spring are always welcome up in the Midwest after a long, hard winter.

As a young lad, maple syrup making time was an annual event we all looked forward to not only for fun, but for profit. My folks lived on the west side of Teed's Woods and the opposing gang lived on the east side. The so-called gangs of that time, "The Depression Days," were bland compared to the gang feuds of the present times.

Each group of "Sap Suckers," as we were known, tried to hog as many of the magnificent maple trees as possible to tap. A hole was bored in the trunk of the tree a couple feet from the ground, a tube made out of the hollow branch of a sumac bush was driven into the hole and a bucket put under it to catch the colorless, water-like juice.

The hotter the weather the more sap would run, and the more often the buckets had to be emptied. The sap was collected and lugged over to our base camp, poured into a huge cast-iron pot and cooked for many, many hours. Our spare time was used to gather firewood for the long night vigil, boiling the sap down to the thick, delicious maple syrup, "the nectar of the gods."

Gang rivalry of the time consisted of sabotaging the opposition's sap by putting some unmentionable liquid in it. Of course, whatever was put in was purified by all that boiling. The huge ratio of finished syrup in proportion to the many gallons of sap cooked was unbelievable. The maple syrup, the finished product, sold for big bucks even back in those depression days.

The fun part of the whole syrup-making project was the late night fire tending. Fried fish and frog legs, along with baked potatoes buried in the fire, were delicacies shared while ghost stores were told. It was not unusual to have a late night visit from our rivals, who would try to disrupt our sticky operation in retaliation.

For our treat, which bordered on "ambrosial," we would boil a small amount of the syrup down further to obtain maple sugar. We would scoop up the "Mrs. See's" of the time with our fingers after it had cooled a little. Man, oh man, was that ever good stuff!

The old time fun times would be "dullsville" compared to the present-day exciting, expensive and dangerous activities of teenagers.

Festival for the Animals kicks off "Be Kind to Animals Week" with talented guest stars

Tradition will be carried on Sunday, May 6th by the San Diego Humane Society and S.P.C.A. to celebrate National "Be Kind to Animals Week" (May 6-12) as it hosts its 5th annual "Festival for Animals" at the Nautilus Amphitheater in Sea World, according to Executive Director Fred Lee. "Our Festival educates while it entertains because it features so many beautiful and talented animals," said Lee. Among the talented animal guests at the Festival will be "Jonathan," a talking Triton Sulphur Crested Cockatoo, police service dogs, "Tony Lama Llama," the honorary major of Ramona, and "Scooter," a trick quarterhorse. Additionally, the Festival will feature Humane Educators Al Matthews, Bobbi Atwater, and the animals from the Society's Humane Education Program, including "Sandy & K.C.," the S.P.C.A. dog and cat."A special highlight for dog lovers will be the 'Canine Flyball Races' demonstrated by members of the Obedience Club of San Diego County," added Lee.

Winners of the San Diego Humane Society's Be Kind to Animals Week/Kids' Poster Contest will be honored at the Festival, as well. Youngsters will receive $100 and $50 gift certificates from J.C. Penney's and have their posters displayed outside the amphitheater.

"Folks have enjoyed our Festival for the Animals since 1985 because they like seeing the different variety of critters and they know that the money they paid for their tickets goes to care for unwanted and abused animals," Lee added. Festival tickets include admission to Sea World. If purchased by May 5, tickets will be discounted at 25% less than Sea World's regular admission prices: Adults - $16 each; Senior Citizens (55+) & Children (3 to 11) - $12 each; Children under 3- free.

Tickets can be purchased in advance by mailing orders with checks or money orders (made payable to San Diego Humane Society) to: Festival for the Animals, 887 Sherman St., San Diego, CA 92110. Questions regarding the Festival may be answered by calling the Society's Shelter at 299-7012. Tickets purchased at Sea World on May 6 will be the regular admission price to the park.

Last year, the Festival entertained some 2,000 animal lovers while raising over $12,000 for the San Diego Humane Society. "Since we don't receive any tax support, the sale of our Festival tickets really helps keep our work for unwanted and abused animals going," Lee noted. Animal lovers who'd like to support the Festival, but are unable to attend on May 7 can purchase tickets for needy groups.

The San Diego Humane Society and S.P.C.A. is celebrating its 110th anniversary this year. It serves the animals and people throughout San Diego County by: Finding new homes for unwanted pets; Investigating reports of animal neglect and cruelty; Educating youngsters on humane treatment of animals; Providing Pet-assisted Therapy visits to rehabilitation facilities, hospitals, and convalescent homes; and Rescuing animals in the event of emergencies.

Next year's ASB officers at Helix High School are: Gary Walton, president, Jennifer Brandland, vice president, Chris Bright, treasurer, and Wendy Mortier, secretary.

Gary Walton, who was elected president, is optimistic, and has many ideas for Helix next year. "I would like to hear what students want," said Walton, "what the needs are to make school more enjoyable."

Walton said he would like to have more talent shows and school-sponsored activities for the students. He said that it is essential to motivate students. "There are some kids here who just attend school,"he said,"one of my goals is to get everyone involved."

Erik Bliss, ASB president in 1987, is looked upon by Walton as a "mentor".

"I look upon Erik Bliss as a role model," Walton said,"He had time for everything, his studies and the sports he was involved in."

Walton said that it was an honor to be chosen as ASB president, but added, "Nothing is going to be easy, but I always get the job done, no matter what it takes."

Other officers also elected were Michelle Espinoza, Commissioner of Special Projects; Amy Riley, Commissioner of Sales; Sheri Espinoza, Commissioner of Human Relations; and Karrie Downey, Commissioner of Spirit.

Helix grad on college set design crew

Jennifer Hammond of Lemon Grove, a freshman at Carleton College, Northfield, Minnesota, was a member of the set design crew for the recent production of Howard Ashman and Alan Menken's "Little Shop of Horrors."

Hammond, a graduate of Helix High School, is the daughter of Dr. Charles and Mrs. Darleen Hammond, San Miguel Avenue, Lemon Grove.

Cuyamaca professor to lead tour

Imagine yourself basking in the sun of a warm, tropical paradise or standing on top of a pyramid overlooking an ancient Aztec domain. Those students participating in a 21-day excursion to Mexico this summer will experience these and many other adventures.

Cuyamaca College Professor Dr. Ezequiel Cardenas will lead students, staff and members of the community through Mexico from July 11-31. The group will visit such diverse places as Acapulco, a tropical beach resort; Taxco, a town whose principle industry is silver mining; Guanajuanto, a picturesque, colonial town; Mexico City, a busy cosmopolitan city that abounds with museums and theaters; and Guadalajara, the city that is said to embody the "essence of Mexico."

The cost from San Diego is $1,680. Included in this price are three units of lower division academic credit, air and land transportation, hotel accommodations, and most meals. Applications are processed on a first-come, first-served basis, and a limited number of spaces are still available. There is a $350 deposit due with the application, and the final balance is due June 15.

Cardenas, a native of Mexico, has led students from California colleges, including Grossmont and Cuyamaca, on study tours for the past 14 years. He has lead students to Mexico, Europe, and Central America. His most recent excursion was to Costa Rica, this past January.

"Students have the invaluable opportunity to experience another culture first hand," said Cardenas of his trips. "They learn about the theory of language and culture in the classroom, but after visiting another country they gain a much broader perspective of that country, as well as of their own."

For more information or an application, contact Dr. Cardenas at 465-1700, ext. 557, (voice mailbox #3646), or contact him at Cuyamaca College 670-1980, ext. 216, during school hours.

Joe Freed on the Movies

This week's movie: The Guardian

"For thousands of years a religious order known as the druids worshiped trees, sometimes even sacrificing human beings to them. To these worshipers, every tree has its guardian spirit. Most are aligned with goodness and life, but some embody powers of darkness and evil."

Prologue to "The Guardian"

A movie about religious freaks and killer trees...just what I always wanted.

In his first horror film since the acclaimed 1973 hit "The Exorcist," director William Friedkin centers on the experiences of a young couple who discover that their live-in nanny has a nightmarish secret. She's one of those druid freaks I was talking about, and she likes to lie around naked in the forest flirting, quite literally, with mother nature. A nanny for newborn infants, our druid friend gains the confidence of parent employers and then sacrifices their babies to a tree (god?) that has a nasty disposition. Have you ever seen a piece of wood rip off a man's head before? I hadn't either.

Jenny Seagrove (T.V.'s "A Woman of Substance") is Camilla, the sadistic babysitter, and Dwier Brown ("Field of Dreams") and Cary Lowell ("License to Kill") are the harried parents of baby Jake, Camilla's latest choice of sacrificial victims. All three actors do well in their roles, but none are anything spectacular. After all, this a horror film, which has come to indicate average acting.

The film has fantastic special effects, and director of photography John A. Alonzo has recorded some breathtaking scenes. Sadly, that isn't enough to carry the rest of the film which is average, leaning toward awful. The greatest flaw is the screenplay, written by Friedkin with Stephen Volk and Dan Greenburg, which is surprisingly full of holes. After "The Exorcist" I expected a lot more from Friedkin who has often been referred to as the master of modern horror. But the script introduces at least four subplots or occurrences that are never explained or resolved. If you've seen the movie or plan to see it, ask yourself these questions: What were those earthquakes all about and why did they stop? Why did Camilla have to kill baby Jake before his blood cells developed? How were the wolves related to the tree cult? And where the heck were all the other druids? If you have any idea at all, send them to me care of this newspaper's address.

"The Guardian" isn't suspenseful enough to be considered good horror, and it isn't campy enough to be considered a slasher. So I guess it falls into a new category somewhere in between: bomb.

It's The Law

by Denise Polito
Attorney at Law

Question: What legal steps can I take to prepare for loss of mental capacity as a result of progressive disease (such as Alzheimer's Disease), unconsciousness or some other condition?

Answer: (This is the second part of a two-part answer to the above question. Last week focused on health care decisions; this week, financial decisions are discussed.)

Initially, you should include full descriptions, locations, how title is held, approximate values and any liabilities associated with the assets. Identify the box number and branch of any safe deposit boxes. Furniture, furnishings and personal effects may be lumped into a single category unless you have an item of particular value (such as a valuable antique or piece of jewelry). Also, prepare a list of names, addresses and telephone numbers of your heirs, executor, accountant, attorney, banker, broker and other important individuals. These lists, which should be updated on a yearly basis, will greatly assist the person who will manage your affairs.

You should execute a Will that nominates a person (your executor) to make distributions of your property in accordance with its terms. You may nominate guardians of the estate of your minor children through your Will. You must have a certain level of mental capacity to sign a Will, so execution while you are competent is essential. If you die without a Will (or "intestate"), state law will determine who receives your property.

In addition to executing a Will, you can establish a revocable (or living) trust. The trustee holds property in accordance with the written provisions of the trust for the benefit of the beneficiaries. An estate managed through a fully funded trust will avoid probate and may even avoid the necessity to appoint a conservator in the event of your mental incapacity.

You can also execute a Durable Power of Attorney to designate a friend or relative to act on your behalf with respect to financial and business affairs. You may give your agent immediate authority over your property or limit your agent's authority to your periods of mental or physical incapacity. A conservator of the estate may also be nominated in the Power of Attorney.

In order to give another person access to your bank accounts (for example, to pay bills), you can set up accounts in the name of yourself and another as joint tenants with right of survivorship. A joint tenancy arrangement means that the survivor acquires 100% of the joint tenancy asset on your death. This can lead to unexpected and unwanted results for assets other than bank accounts or motor vehicles since the right of survivorship associated with joint tenancy operates by law without regard to your Will provisions.

You should also consider appointing a successor custodian if you established a Uniform Transfers to Minors Act account for the benefit of a minor, avoiding the expense of court appointment; and substitute payee for veterans or social security benefits, permitting such payee to receive the income on your behalf.

You may purchase disability insurance if you do not have sufficient savings to provide a needed income stream in the event of your disability.

Finally, you may wish to consult with a competent attorney regarding the availability of Medi-Cal. In this era of rising health costs, estates can be depleted quickly by medical expenses. If you are married, it is not necessary to impoverish your spouse in order to qualify for Medi-Cal.

Again, care should be taken with the above documents to insure that the directions and terms are consistent.

Free health screenings will be offered to the public, including blood pressure checks, blood sugar testing, skin cancer screen, calorie intake assessment and flexibility testing.

For more information, call Grossmont Hospital's Senior Programs Department at 465-2582.

NICU Reunion will honor Grossmont Hospital's special babies

A special reunion will be held for babies who spent the first days or weeks of their young lives in Grossmont Hospital's neonatal intensive care unit (NICU).

The celebration, to be held from 10 a.m. to noon May 12th in the parking lot of Grossmont Hospital's Brier Patch campus, will feature family fun including a petting zoo, miniature train rides, clowns and free photo ID's for the children.

Grossmont Hospital's first NICU opened in 1985. More than 1,400 babies born prematurely or with health problems have been treated in the hospital's NICU since that time.

Parents whose babies were treated in Grossmont's NICU, and who have not received an invitation to the reunion, should call 589-4151.
